Megan Libby, Director of Brand Education, Dom Pérignon

Megan's passion for France started early, prompting a year abroad as a high school exchange student in the Rhone Valley. Her host family lived in the A.O.C. of St. Péray, and it was there that she first learned about wine culture. Harper Collins published her book about the experience, Postcards from France. Six years later, she got a Masters in International Wine Business from the Université de Paris X, which took her class of 12 around the world to 40 partner universities and 250 wine regions!

Since then, Megan has specialized in training and education for all segments of the industry. She has worked in three states for importers, marketers and restaurant groups. She also ran Wine Wise Consulting for 7 years as an ambassador for Champagne, Bordeaux, Rioja and Armagnac. Megan is thrilled to be a part of the Moët Hennessy Brand Education team and with your help, she hopes to make Americans fall in love with these legendary products.
