

A Conversation with Jack Meyer, Convexity Co-Founder and former President of Harvard Endowment

September 1, 2015 at 12:30 PM
Hong Kong

Women's causes and the investment world don't often overlap, but Jack Meyer, former President of Harvard Management Company and Co-Founder of Convexity Capital is the exception. He is probably best known in the investment world for quadrupling the endowment of Harvard University during his 15 year tenure or residing over Convexity's $15 billion in assets. He is also actively engaged in philanthropic ventures across the world, notably one of the founders of the Asian University for Women in Bangladesh, a university that is dedicated to the education and leadership development of women from across Asia and the Middle East.

Join us for an engaging and wide ranging conversation with Jack Meyer, who will speak about how his career has intersected investments and public service, and why he has been so passionately devoted to the cause of women's education.
